In a manufacturing process of a semiconductor device, a cleaning process for removing an organic matter and an inorganic matter that are adhering to the surface of a substrate and the surface of a processing apparatus to thereby improve the surface condition of the substrate and the processing apparatus is performed. To perform the cleaning process, a cleaning liquid having a predetermined chemical solution composition is sprayed onto the substrate or the processing apparatus to thereby wet the surface of the substrate or the surface of the processing apparatus. When the cleaning process is performed by using the chemical solution composition in which abrasives such as oxides are dissolved, it is difficult to remove the dirt of the substrate and the surface of the processing apparatus without scratches due to the abrasives contained in the cleaning liquid. In view of this, to reduce an influence of the abrasives on the substrate or the surface of the processing apparatus, a cleaning liquid which is substantially free of the abrasives, or a cleaning liquid in which a slight amount of abrasives is contained, is used. The chemical solution composition is generally supplied to a manufacturing apparatus as a concentrate. As a method for preparing the chemical solution composition used for the cleaning process, a method in which the concentrate is diluted with the cleaning liquid (for example, U.S. Pat. No. 3,975,218) is known. In this method, however, the time of concentrate supply to the cleaning liquid is increased, and the cost required for concentrate supply also is increased. To solve this problem, a chemical solution composition used in the cleaning process can be prepared by dissolving the constituents of the composition which are liquid at room temperature with a solvent to prepare a solution (for example, U.S. Pat. No. 7,144,932). However, when the solvent is left in the cleaning liquid to be used for cleaning, in the manufacturing process of the semiconductor device, the substrate and the processing apparatus are contaminated with the solvent. For this reason, when the chemical solution composition prepared by dissolving the constituents of the composition which are liquid at room temperature is used for cleaning, the cleaning liquid with which the substrate and the processing apparatus can be sufficiently cleaned can be obtained by dissolving the constituents of the composition which are liquid at room temperature with a solvent, and removing the solvent from the solution. However, for example, when a silicon-containing etching agent is dissolved in the solvent, the etching agent is separated from the solution as a precipitate by the vacuum evaporation process.

In a mobile communication system a number of different techniques exist for the provision of radio communication between a base station and mobile units. In wideband code division multiple access (WCDMA), a radio interface known as evolved universal terrestrial radio access (EUTRA) is being developed. In relation thereto, 3rd generation partnership project (3GPP) has specified the use of joint detection (JD) in a common pilot channel (CPICH) between base station and mobile unit. The principle is illustrated in FIG. 1. In this example, the base station needs to communicate with a mobile unit 10, although it is clear that base stations may also need to communicate with one or more other mobile units. On the basis of 3GPP TS 25.211, v6.8.0, the common pilot channel (CPICH) comprises pilot sequences with a duration of a radio frame cycle. When the base station 10 transmits, it sequences the pilot over the complete radio frame cycle. The mobile unit 10 receives the common pilot over the whole radio frame cycle. When the mobile unit 10 is to transmit, it transmits in the beginning of the radio frame cycle, i.e. at the beginning of the radio frame cycle it zero-samples the samples of the received common pilot channel. When the base station 10 is to transmit, it does the same. The resulting sequence of the transmitted common pilot channel and the transmitted mobile unit common pilot channel (comprising the common pilot sequences and the mobile unit zero-samples) is fed to a space time block code (STBC) decoder. The space time block code (STBC) decoding is well known in the art. In the 3GPP specification, the radio frame cycle is 10 milliseconds (ms), and the length of the radio frame cycle is 20 ms. The start of the radio frame cycle is typically defined as radio frame time 0. The end of the radio frame cycle is denoted radio frame time 10, and the length of the radio frame cycle is 10 ms. At the beginning of each radio frame cycle, both the base station and the mobile unit transmit a CPICH corresponding to the last received radio frame cycle. The respective CPICHs are termed reference CPICH (R-CPICH) and repeat CPICH (R-CPICH). Thus, the CPICH corresponds to the following four sequences: sequence A0, A0, A1, A0
